1	i do agree , there are historic buildings in the ivers which need to be protected and other properties of significant importance , however as resident of the area my self , it does seem houses are popping up along some of the residential roads , that to me do not seem in anyway in keeping , more rather sticking out like soar thumbs , i think some of the smaller developments that have gone up , seem to have a nicer , more thought out , even less intrusive look , than the houses that have just appeared on the site of where an old bungalow or house once stood .	2/24/2021 6:17 PM

1	Doesn't go far enough and actually only seems to protect the hallowed areas where most people can't afford to live. Those who live in other areas of iver heath will end up with developers trying to build homes in unsuitable areas, squeezing the highest amount of homes into already densely populated roads, then local parish councillors get sniffy when current residents oppose the plans due to traffic and parking issues-seems to me that you are only protecting areas where house prices are high.	2/16/2021 8:52 AM
